Black Women's Policy Agenda promotes, supports, and effects policy change, building on the collective power of Black women in the community and the organizations and initiatives that serve them. BWPA seeks to shape and change administrative and legislative policy on a local, state, and federal level through storytelling, research, analysis, and advocacy. BWPA kicked off in 2020, and it was an incredible inaugural year for the project. Backbone, leader, and visionary, Rochelle Jackson, began the project out of an observation that while there was and is incredible work happening for Black women in the Greater Pittsburgh region, it was siloed, and Black women were merely surviving, not thriving. Rochelle worked alongside Black women thought leaders in the region and focused in 2020 on LISTENING to Black women, and CENTERING them in the creation of advocacy trainings, policy building, and ultimately in the creation of the Black Women's Policy Center, a physical and virtual space that centers, empowers, and acknowledges the full experience of Black women. The Center will advocate and shift systems change work to focus on the intersectionality of race and gender. They will move the dial and change conditions so that Black women and girls go from surviving to thriving.
